The IBS Prepares for 5th Intake of Degree Students

As A' level school leavers across the British Isles celebrate their results and furiously prepare themselves for student life away at university, The Isle of Man International Business School is gearing itself up for its fifth intake of undergraduate students in September. The school is hoping for an even bigger intake this year and has put together a full Freshers' Week programme to rival many of the much larger higher education institutions in the UK! So far, the student numbers are looking encouraging with the majority of students selecting The IBS as their first choice of institution. Head of Sales and Marketing, Tiffany Jacobsen said,

“The schools' growth in popularity comes as students realise that staying on Island to study is now a thoroughly viable and practical option. Not only does The IBS offer the chance to study without going 'away', it also enables students to fit their study around other commitments such as going out and starting their first job by offering both full and part time undergraduate and postgraduate courses.”

Another boost to the school's popularity has been the exceptionally good degree results achieved by the first cohort of students who graduated this July. Great results combined with high quality work experience gained during the third year of study has meant IBS graduates have walked in to some high flying and stimulating first jobs. This is further proof of the service that The IBS is providing to the Manx business community by supplying a stream of quality, future employees, most of whom are committed to staying on-Island and contributing to the Manx economy.

No exception to this is recent graduate, Aly Lewin, the first ever student at The IBS to achieve a first class honours degree. Aly is one of just 7 students to receive a first class honours degree from Liverpool John Moores University (The IBS' academic partner) in 2005. The school is justifiably proud of her achievement and is delighted to hear that Aly has recently taken up an exciting position within the marketing department of the IOM Film Commission!

The IBS still has places available on undergraduate and postgraduate courses starting this September and anybody interested in finding out more should contact, The IBS Admissions Department on 693709 to discuss their options.
