International Business School Launches New Prospectus

The Isle of Man International Business School has launched a new prospectus aimed at attracting new students onto its various programmes.

The new prospectus contains detailed information on the range of degree programmes, professional qualifications and short courses that are available to study on-Island.

Head of Sales and Marketing, Tiffany Jacobsen said:

“This year’s prospectus is better than ever – it includes more courses and more case studies on our existing students and graduates. These case studies demonstrate the diverse student body at The IBS and what motivates our students to study here on the Island. We hope that prospective students will identify with them.

The IBS is an embodiment of ‘life-long learning’ and we welcome students of all ages and backgrounds. This new prospectus will be one of our main tools for attracting new interest over the next 12 months.”

The prospectus was launched on 26th January at a formal occasion at The Nunnery, home of The IBS. Chris Hall, Managing Director of Manx Telecom and Ron Spencer, Chairman of the Chartered Management Institute on the Isle of Man, both addressed the invited guests and spoke of the valuable contribution that The IBS is making to the Island’s business community in providing first class higher education facilities.
